

Test results from Jung typology

Upon completion of the Jung typology test I have gotten the letter coding ISTJ, which means Introverted, Sensing, Thinking, Judgement. Some of the personality traits are as followed and wither or not I agree with them will be stated after each on as it is written.

People with this letter coding are very knowing of what is right and what is wrong which I totally agree with, I have done a lot of things both good and bad which when they were bad I knew they were and felt guilt every time I did. They have a strong devotion to duty, again this is another area that's correct I felt guilty at most jobs just for calling out sick because of the unnatural loyalty to my employers, they also give off the impression of being aloof and cold, this I can agree with to a point I was a lot colder in my younger years but becoming a father and getting older has softened me up to trying to be a more empathetic person which is for the best.

The next section states that people that got ISTJ were best worked at step-by-step situations which I completely agree with, an example is when I used to cook for a living when it got busy things got really chaotic and generally everyone that I worked with would get lost on what to do next and for me after the stress kicked in I could easily formulate how to break down everything I needed to do in steps and when to do it to get everyone back on course. That was not always an easy task but most of the time I was able to pull us out of whatever bind we were in by doing so.

The next part of the results states that they get frustrated by others inconsistencies even more so when there was an commitment in place and they generally don't say how they feel until asked and they don't sugar coat it. This part I agree and disagree with, I agree that I get easily frustrated with people and keeping their commitments but when asked about it I generally say nothing because I've been so used to things falling through due to other peoples actions.

Lastly the test states that if there is something that's a time honored tradition then the person will fight at all costs to see it happen. This last part I'm at a disagreement with because I have gone through so man changes with marriage that I have had to learn compromise which means that changing a time honored thing means little to nothing for me.
