1. The patient was taught how to get a urine sample. They should be treated with respect and privacy, because they were also instructed to put a gown on after.
2. That would be manipulation, because it is the movement of a joint.
3. The patient is in fowler's position.
4. No suspicious lesions or anything like that.
5. This is a certain way you treat certain patients which isn't fair to them and it can cause a strained relationship between you and the patient.
6. Be very observant, make sure to note something unusual or complaints in detail, make sure to use a pain scale if pain is mentioned, make sure to do medical and previous history.
7. The modes of examination: Inspection, manipulation, mensuration, auscultation, percussion and palpation.
8. What the patient needs to know, how they take it, how they will use the information, any resources available, if they understand.
