Reflection 3

This week learning about the integumentary has been interesting. I never knew how much there is going on within our skin! I also never knew about how many conditions of the skin there were. Or about the mechanics of a burn or burn classifications. People will come into the office for a whole array of skin conditions and burns once I am working as a medical assistant and learning about how the skin works and how it heals itself will make it easier for me and my provider to care for our patient. Knowing what I am looking at and having an idea of how the provider may proceed in treatment will help when asking the patient questions pertaining to what is going on. Being able to have a working knowledge of the integumentary system will help me keep my questions relevant and save my provider time. Also save the patient from having to repeat themselves.
