If I was put in a leadership role I think there would definitely be some key principles I would use to lead as well as motivate the employees that would be following me in the workplace. For starters I would need to be passionate about my role and the company I was leading for to ensure that my employees were just as excited about the work as me and to make sure they would do the work I assigned to them to the best of their ability. Next, I would always be willing to implement and adapt to change to ensure that we are always up to date with current parameters of the workforce and societal norms in the business world. Finally, I would focus on team work as a key factor for success and use that to carry everyone. I would hold people accountable for their actions, and make sure people rose to the occasion in terms of their individual responsibilities. I think the combination of these three key principles as well as slipping a few other principles in between them would truly help the overall success of my leadership and ensure that nothing slips through the cracks or goes unnoticed.
