

Photography Professions

1. Photojournalist

Photojournalists photograph newsworthy people, places, and sporting, political, and community events for newspapers, journals, magazines or television that is needed to relate a particular story for their organization. Being a photojournalist will help you become a visual storyteller.

2. Fine Art Photographer

Fine art photographers sell work to individuals, galleries, interior designers, architects, libraries, community centers, churches, banks, hotels, government and elsewhere on a freelance basis or by commission. Fine art photographers enjoy creative freedom not generally allowed to freelance or staff photographers, but they must also be extremely self-motivated.

3. Scientific Photographers

Scientific photographers record data and illustrate technical information for medicine, science, business, and government purposes. The photos captured by scientific photographers are commonly used in training, conferences, and exhibitions. They typically use microscopes to photograph scientific or medically related images and phenomena that are too small to see.

4. Wildlife photographer

Wildlife photography requires a lot of patience, while some shots are required to have fast reflexes and a strong hand eye coordination, most of the time is spent waiting for the animals to do something or appear altogether.

5. Sports photographer

Sports photography is one of the most dynamic jobs in the discipline, as there is neverending action unfolding right in front of your camera at all times. You'll never be bored but you'll need to develop incredible technical skills. It is imperative to invest in a powerful lense in order to be able to capture everything going on in the game.

6. Fashion photographer

Fashion photography is a middle ground between commercial and portrait photography. Fashion photography is where you'll be able to make the most of your artistic and creative ideas.

7. Aerial or Drone Photographers

Aerial photographers take pictures out of helicopters or planes, while drone photographers take photos using drones. Typically, these kinds of photographers take pictures of landscapes, buildings, events, or other scenery.

8. Wedding photographer

Wedding photography is often considered the ideal choice for making a living out of capturing images. It covers three of the main points people look for in their career: It's meaningful, pays well, and there is a high demand for it. Plus, you get to shoot photos people will treasure forever.

9. Commercial photographer

Commercial/Industrial photographers capture images used for books, advertisements, catalogs, and wide media. They take pictures of a wide variety of objects and subjects, including models, landscapes, buildings, and merchandise. An industrial photographer might take pictures of machinery, workers, and other products that can be useful to workers in analyzing, public relations, and business strategies.

10. Travel photographer

Travel photography is exploring and capturing new locations and cultures. They are generally freelance photographers working with a sturdy portfolio because it is not an easy photography choice.

Retrieved August 21, 2020, from https://study.com/photographer\_career.html

Academics. (n.d.). Retrieved August 21, 2020, from <https://www.bhsu.edu/Academics/Arts-Humanities/Photography/Careers>

Ricart, J. (2019, June 13). 10 Photography Careers You Can Actually Live Off. Retrieved August 21, 2020, from <https://www.wix.com/blog/photography/2019/06/13/photography-careers>