

A little about me!

Hello everyone, my teacher asked me to pick five different character traits that I and others have picked to best represent me. Within the five I pick I also have to find different items and share them with the class. So without a doubt let's get started let me introduce my first item and first trait.

My first item I want to share with you all today is a calendar. I chose a calendar to represent my character trait; organizational. I am a very organized person when it comes to everything. I have a big whiteboard calendar in my room as well as a big nice planner I try to use everyday to keep up with my work. It is super important to stay organized especially as college students. I also have 6 siblings so being organized in a house with 8 people is super important if you never want to lose anything. I asked a lot of my friends and they told me I was super organized.

My next trait I want to share with you all will be bold. Being bold has always just come easily to me. Being nervous to speak publicly has never really affected me. You might show how bold you are by walking across the street in heavy traffic, but for me I show that I am bold by speaking up when you see someone being treated unfairly. When you act in a bold way, you are taking risk whether it's super big or super small; you could be risking physical danger, embarrassment, or your reputation. My item to show that I am bold is hanging lights. I chose this item because lights always bring attention just like being bold does, it can be positive or negative.

My third trait I want to share with the class is being flexible. The ability to be flexible is perhaps one of the most important elements of good leadership. Not everything will go as planned, and somewhere along the line, someone will throw a wrench all over your plans. I understand I just told y'all I'm super organized. A truly great leader can quickly adapt to new situations and find a way around them, rather than wallow in the misfortune of something changing you did not know was happening. I never give up or attempt to plough on with the plan anyway. With this being said the item I picked to show this is frisbee. Just like when a frisbee's thrown in the air I can choose any direction to go and most of the time for me it does not go the direction I threw it in.

My fourth trait is courage. Courage is an interesting thing, but incredibly important in a great leader. A leader needs to be able to stand alone and stand up for what they believe in. Having the courage to do what you believe in will always win. It can sometimes be one of the hardest things to do. Sometimes you must stand against people you call friends and family. The ability to hold firm and not succumb to negativity or the pressure to crumble is how I picked my next item. My item is a poster of "Courage the cowardly dog", everyone knows this strange TV show but I think the character Courage represents me.

My last trait is being able to communicate effectively. This is a super skill for anyone who wants to succeed in business. But communication is not always about saying the right words. For my item I picked my phone. The phone is used to talk on all the time like I do.

To conclude, my life has been a wild adventure. My top traits I picked to share with you all today has been through life experiences. Each one of my items as well impacts me daily or in some way. Being a good leader is not all sunshine and rainbows. Sometimes you will have to make difficult or unpopular decisions to get things done, thank you for listening.
