1. What sources of knowledge are alternative to social research?
There are four alternatives to social research such as personal experience and common sense, someone in power says so by listening to a perspective from someone with authority, extending knowledge by talking to others and picking up information from the media, and ideologic beliefs and values.
2. Why is social research usually better than the alternatives?
Social research requires careful study of events, experiences , and facts. Meanwhile alternative research is loosely based on opinions and perspectives rather facts. Alternatives to social research can be inaccurate information.
3. Is social research always right? Can it answer any question? Explain.
Social research is not always right and cannot answer any and all questions possible. This simply due to humans not being able to know everything possible even with careful studies. When researching a researcher could look at a study from a certain perspective that could answer the question wrong. In other cases alternatives to social research may be more necessary, such as when taking a survey or poll on the peoples opinion.
