

little about me

I am going to share with you a few things that I discovered about myself that at some point even I did not know about. At first, when I read a brown paper bag speech, I didn't think I'd have to disclose anything about myself as I believed that I was supposed to be putting certain things in a brown bag to gift a classmate or someone of my choosing. This will truly be one of the weirdest things I've done here at school, writing about myself, but I will disclose to you all with 5 character traits about me that even I didn't know about which will be going in said brown paper bag.

The first item in my brown paper bag is a beautiful smiling face. Very few of those who know me can tell about a time that I was not smiling. I mostly smile because there is no reason to be mad or upset, it just ruins your day and the day of those around you. Even though sometimes things do not go my way and it upsets me, I try to maintain my composure by keeping a smile on my face. I also believe that if someone is having a rough day and you encounter them throughout said day. It is important that you provide the positive energy that they need in their life. So, staying happy not only make my life easier but it has a great and special impact to those who I am surrounded by.

The next item in my brown paper bag is tranquility. For as long as I can remember, I have always been a calm person, even though I will switch up if needed. I find it so easy and healthy to stay calm that I would hate to have to change that. It is one of the most important party of releasing positive energy because you are sometimes in your own world in the sense that you're never bothering anyone, and it allows people to want to be around you.

The next item in my brown paper bag is possibly my favorite of all and it is my optimism. I am always confident and hopeful in whatever situation I'm in because I believe that I have control over everything that goes on in my life and I believe that my failure and success are in my hands and whichever one I end up with is all on me. Being optimistic also means that I am cheerful and sanguine which I proudly accept as parts of my personal traits.

The next item in my brown paper bag is my creative ability. Over the years, I have learned to be resourceful because I do not typically get everything I want so to manage, I find ways to be resourceful. One of the easiest ways to be resourceful is to utilize your creative abilities. At times when there are things you need for certain things and you are unable to afford or get it, look around you, there are always things around you to use to get the job done.

The last item in this brown paper bag is gratitude. I am always grateful for the people in my life even though I personally find it hard to tell them. I'm grateful for any and every little thing that has happened throughout my life because I believe that they're the reason that I am who I am.

Although I am nowhere near perfect, and I know that I have many flaws, I still manage to be a good civilian. I would like to continue and rant, but this is way more than enough for now. I appreciate you for taking time out of your day to listen to me.
