The Remix- Images to Differentiate Thought

Image One

The first picture I am going to refer to is the picture on the first slide. The picture asks if we see a musician or a woman.

- Raise three questions that the image elicits.
  - How do you merge two different images to make it look like one image?
  - What song is the musician playing?
  - Why does the woman have such a serious demeanor?

- Share three underlying assumptions and implications surrounding the image.
  - The seriousness on the woman's face shows that she has a one track.
  - I assume that the musician has a high confidence level because he is the only musician in the picture.
  - The woman is in deep thought and she is in tune with whatever it is she's thinking about.

Image Two

This image is on the "Neither Right or Wrong!" slide that states the directions. The two men are standing over a pile of sticks. They are debating whether or not there are three sticks, or four. Depending on how you look at the sticks, you can see three sticks, as well as four sticks.

- Raise three questions that the image elicits.
  - Why are the sticks on the ground?
  - What made them debate on the number of sticks?
  - How is the illusion set up, and why do we see three as well as four sticks?

- Share three underlying assumptions and implications surrounding the image.
  - I assume they have nothing else better to do with their day.
  - They must be friends because they look comfortable having this conversation.
  - They are both correct, but it seems as if they are both indecisive.

- Can you make any connections (positive or negative) between any two of the images? Which two? What deeper probing questions are raised? What underlying implications can you note?
  - Both images have two different views in them. In both images, you see more than what the picture actually is.
  - A deeper question that I had about these two images is, what made the author of the pictures think about when putting two scenes in one image?
