Reading Assessments and Intervention

1. Reading assessments and interventions are essential because they allow teachers to make inferences on their needs and strengths. It also allows for teachers to infer on the development of the reader. These two things are used to support reading instruction because they are used to assess specific reading skills and compare students reading with different knowledge levels. There are many intervention strategies that teachers can use to evaluate the students' mastery level. Skills like student echo-reading, student choral-reading, and student-partner reading are all used as intervention strategies for learning readers.
