

Institutions play a major role in many societies in the U.S... Some of the common institutions that we see in our societies is the police stations, schools, hospitals, and businesses like Walmart. All of these are core parts of our community. Another thing is general individuals are reliant on the institution that's in their societies. But the true questions are does institutions need individuals? The answer to that is institutions needs a lot of people to contribute to them because they just don't focus on one individual to contribute. So, it's like imbalance between institutions and individuals. Also, the society needs ways to keep people healthy so you have a medication society. While watching the video I see that its different types of views of institutions. The first one is conservative view that is a political and social philosophy promote traditional social institutions in context of culture and civilization. Secondly you have progressive view that is a political philosophy in support of social reform. Lastly "institutions" have two different means to an average person that hear it think of a business or corporation. From a sociology point of view, they think of social structures when they hear the word institution.