As you have notice for the past nine months the world has been in a trauma. We have all have endured challenges throughout this year that has took a toll on one. Many college students from around the country have had to overcome adversity through these troubling times. One of the main ways are that hundred thousands of students are being charged campus housing fees even though, they are not receiving the proper in person instruction and being given more online assignments. This is not fair to us college students because all of us are not on athletic scholarship majority of the student body of on campus students around the nation are taking out student loans to cover those costs for the fees.

The average cost of fees for tuition including housing is 10,440 $ per semester and that can be pretty costly to others. I feel like students around the country should stand together as let their voice be known about how they feel. A great amount of college Students that are staying off campus this semester are smart because that's money that you don't have to take out a loan for. For the grace of college students I feel like those who have paid for those fall classes should receive some sort of reward from the schools financial office if they are not receiving the proper in person instruction needed from there professor or whomever. Much of the in class instruction and extracurricular activities including sports vanished around April do the coronavirus outbreak which took a toll on many students especially the spring athletes who was in the process of kicking off there seasons .

Many schools around the country has provided partial refunds for students room and board that would be sent home but other schools such as mine are still holding on firm to the tuition, arguing that in person classes will still move forward and credit will still be awarded toward degrees .in my opinion I feel as the class president for each class should express to the school administration on behalf of the others and express how they feel as whole. We should all be rebellion against colleges and universities that refuse to cut tuition during these hard times of this pandemic. This school year students at my school benedict college should not be charged for housing considering they were promised in person instruction but are not receiving any due to the fact that professors are canceling the classes and adding more online work.

In closing over the past couple of months students have been returning home from college due to lack of instruction and the constant rise of covid 19 cases among the student body over the first few months of the semester. We all have had to overcome trials and tribulations throughout 2020 by battling these hard times together. It's not fair to college students because a lot of us students are paying for our schooling with students loans that will untimely put us major debt after college.
