Define Leadership

Merriam-Webster defines leadership as the act of leading people or an organization [CITATION Mer161 \l 1033]. However, leadership is much more than this definition would suggest. As a leader of people or any organization, there are several characteristics that one most possession, excellent communication, submission, and dependability. A key component of leadership is communication; a leader must have the ability to effectively communicate their vision in a way that the recipient understands. Leadership involves submission, to be a great leader you also have to be a great follower. You can't expect for anyone to exercise submission if the leader is not exhibiting that as well. Finally, a leader must be dependable, consistently being reliable and trustworthy. Through these characteristics, I would define leadership is the ability to lead and positively influence people through good communication, submission and dependability.
