

DM 933 ISSUES OF TRUSTWORTHINESS AND LIMITATIONS

Freddie Baisden
DM 933 Project Dissertation Proposal

Beulah Heights University

Professor Alicia Plant

Department of Religious Studies

November 27, 2018

Issues of Trustworthiness

I have tried to draw conclusions in this study that can be reproduced by anyone using the same methods I have used in this study will come to the same conclusions I have in my study. I have used the qualitative method in this study because it is more suitable for the size and time limitations of the community being studied.

The qualitative method studies the story of the community, that is what is going on in the community at this time in the life of the community. There are other methods such as the quantitative method that has to do with mathematics and statistical test to analyze data. This method could have been used as well. However as the study is limited by time frame and sample size, the qualitative approach would be more appropriate for this study. Furthermore, other qualitative studies such as phenomenological research, narrative method, grounded theory, ethnographic, and case study methods could have been utilized as well. However, the interview and survey methods allow the researcher to adequately investigate the research questions that guide this study.

Additionally, the researcher will include a consent form to all participants who participated in this study. This will advise them that they have the right to withdraw at any time, that their response will be kept confidential, and reveal any risk associated with participation in the study. It will also include any benefits and the overall purpose of the study. Finally, the researcher will be the person collecting all data in this study.

I have offered evidence for every conclusion I have drawn. I have not included my own opinion in any conclusion I have drawn in this study. I have discovered more areas that need further study.

