

Three Writing Styles

Debra Rucker

ATH11502

Success for Life Ministry

Department of religious Studies

8/31/19

Introduction

There are many different ways that you can write a paper or an essay. I am not really familiar with the different writing styles, but I am willing to learn how each one are done. Some writing styles seems a little more complicated than others, so I will like to learn a way that is easy as possible. The three writing styles that a school or college requires are TURABIAN, MLA, and APA style. There are ways to learn them and you can do so by searching through the internet, or getting the information and examples from your teacher or having a friend or someone who knows something about each writing style.

TURABIAN style is require to have footnotes and endnotes, you have to have the page number and the sources has to be listed in separated bibliography and it has to have a date ; year of publication, a reference list and full in bibliographic where information is needed.

MLA style is used in literature and humanities and contain where tutorial for citing in MLA style. You have to have sample papers and bibliographies; the formatting is mostly used in academic papers and arts.

APA style you will have to have the year of publication of the source, which is allows in the text formation, in essays, books, and publication papers. These are the three ways of styles which is allowed for certain papers to be in its format.

The APA writing style seem to be the one that is easy and not complicated; you don't have to be in a strain trying to write a paper that requires a whole lot of work to do. I am glad that you don't have to have the footnotes and endnotes and all the separate sources and bibliography you have to have for writing. I like it simple and the APA is simple enough. MLA mostly used in modern language formatting and you have to have sample papers. TURABIAN and MLA calls for a lot of work to do when it comes to writing a paper. I don't think that writing a paper should be hard, and complicated. When writing a paper; the writer should be able to relax and enjoy writing their essay.

APA is the one used in a lot of colleges when it comes to writing an essay. I think that college professors are pleased with this type of writing and that the students will find it easy to accomplish. I believe that all classes could utilize this format. "The front will be clear and readable, it has a 12 font and is in the Times New Roman font. Writing in the APA style is easier read and you can understand the paper in its writing. The paper is in the same format or uniform and is easy to stay focus on the paper.