

Hi! I am an awesome Lake Affect snow storm hanging out in the atmosphere, waiting for just the right temperature to hit Lake Michigan before I can go do my job. Once the temperatures are right they will move across the lake and then move me onto land. Then I can join my buddies and fall just right.

The next day Guess what happened! I finally got to fall! The kids were in school and me and my friends caused such a mess they had to close school! The kids and teachers were very excited for a longer Christmas break. They really like it when we fall before the weekends and school breaks.

Spring has finally come to Michigan and it is time for me to melt into the ground. I turn into groundwater. I am going to help root systems of trees, grass and flowers come out of hibernation after a long winter.

I ended up in this well water system. Wells are used to water animals and plants and humans use them for everyday use. I am very important to the world here. I quickly get used to water the cattle here. It's awful hot and these guys drink a lot!

After the cattle drink us up, they need to cool off. Down to the cow pond they head to cool off. They go into the water and hang out for a while. They aren't very clean down there. They like to poop and pee into the pond. It makes it pretty gross and tends to pollute the water. No one else will go into the water except the cattle.

Aaahhhh! I am out of there! I finally evaporated back up into the atmosphere! I am going to hang out up here in the clouds for a while and enjoy my summer break! See you in November!
