

It was a rainy day, the clouds were grey and covered the sky. All flowers, trees, and other plants were waiting to be quenched of their thirst. Then, as thunder roared, rain fell and all plants were drinking. A whole orchard of flowers with big tree were even soaking up all the water but below the tree, in the dirt where the roots were a centipede crawled. Then, not to later on in the life of the tree, osmosis occurred and water was released from the roots of the tree and the flowers and then was pumped up from a nearby well as ground water.

As the groundwater was pumped up from a well in a town. They used it to water lots of plants and crop in their village, since they further from the nearby lake and mountains. As they kept watering for and stocking up crop for the winter extra water in the lake started to freeze but before it did it was eventually evaporated then further spread as snow.

As it was continually snowing, the precipitation and condensation further traveled further out. As the snow traveled it traveled to warmer places and starting to become rainfall. One kid, JoJoe, was outside playing in the rain, splashing and jumping. He had an idea to make this rainy day more fun and went into the house and grabbed a water dish. Though you would think the boy would fill it with water, he decided to scoop up dirt and puddles and watch worms wiggle around in the water dish as the water filled.

Once again, the water moved and went away. This time JoJoe helped a lot. He and his family went out of the city and to a lake house just a few miles away. JoJoe brought his water dish full of his tiny little friends. As he and his family were fishing and swimming JoJoe thought it would be nice to give his worm friends a family and dumped the water dish out into the water. As he and his family left, the sun started evaporation and it traveled up to the atmosphere and created big large clouds all over for miles.

Distant from the lake house, in the atmosphere above the peak of mountains is started to heavily snow. All around everyone was warned to stay in doors and be safe on the roads. Though young Jimmy heard of all this he did not take it into consideration when he decided to go snowboarding. As he looked upon all the hill he was about to slide down, his friend came and told him he definitely shouldn't be doing this and if he did no one would be able to save him since the storm was holding up traffic. So Jimmy decided to go inside and watch some netflix and drink hot cocoa, as the clouds were still precipitating the snow.