Why Nursing?

All of my life growing up, I have always been fascinated by the medical world. Whether it be movies, stories, or real experiences, seeing and learning about all that goes into the care and healing of the human body perked an interest in me. As I grew older and started deciding what I wanted to do in life, all I knew at first was that I wanted to be in a position that actually made a difference, and where I could actually help people hands-on. I started looking into the nursing career and have loved every step of the way since. I want to be a nurse so that I can be in a place to truly help people of all sorts. I want to learn how to care for people, how to tend to wounds, injuries, diseases, and recovery, and I also want to be in a place to emotionally be there for people. More than ever, our world is in need of people who know how to take care of others, whether it be a minor accident, a deadly illness, or just a difficult stage of life. I want to be a part of that, and to use what I learn in nursing school, and continue learning as a nurse, to help better the lives of those around me, both in a work setting, and in my day-to-day life.
