

Why Nursing?

Great question! Among many professions, I choose nursing because I believe that nursing is my calling. I am 24 years old, and my call to nursing is a bit late compared to other people. Still, I will work hard and pursue my dream of becoming a great nurse. I had an opportunity to see some of a nurse's roles when working as a nurse aide. From there, I learned some meaning of nursing and that the world of nursing is constantly changing. Nurses there told me that nursing is demanding and challenging. I could not agree more because seeing them working with physicians, co-workers, other providers, patients, and patients' families and handling situations that are sometimes beyond and above their reach seems quite stressful.

Nevertheless, I feel that the nursing profession is the noblest job because nurses play several roles. They are the bridge between providers and patients; they are care providers, teachers, advocates, and patients' voices, and they are the first to be aware of patients' conditions. Nurses are superheroes, and they are essential to our community, nation, and world. I cannot imagine without nurses in the health care field. I wholeheartedly agree that the nursing profession is tough and challenging, but the nurses ahead of me can do it, then why won't I? With God's grace, professionalism, teamwork, and help from other care providers, I can handle things that are above and beyond my reach. I love taking care of people around me, and I am good at it; that's also one reason I choose to become a nurse. I know this may sound cliché, but I think I am born to serve people by becoming a nurse.
