Hello to all, My name is Scott Williams and I will be 55 years old this year. I have been an LVN for 24 years now. I worked for the City of Borger Texas in the sewer department prior to attending school to become a nurse. I had hesitated to go back to school because I hated writing and a friend of mine mentioned nursing and how the barriers were down and that more males were becoming nurses. He also told me that the pay was better and that it was easier to find a job just about anywhere. After hearing his pitch about nursing, I sucked up enough courage to take a college entrance test and I passed. I quit my job and went to school full time. I have always like helping people and while in school felt like this would really be my calling because I could see how what I was doing as a nurse could help people now and for the future. I felt like I belonged especially when patients would get well. I have made many friends with coworkers and patients and created memories that will last a lifetime. 24 years into my career I feel that I made the best career choice when I chose to become a nurse.
