

Yesterday during our meeting, I learned that I know so much more than I give myself credit for sometimes. The scenarios we received were very helpful in getting our brains going and thinking like a health care provider. Being able to use our resources to come up with nursing diagnosis and nursing interventions was very helpful. I was amazed at all of the great ideas we came up with as a group. There are so many interventions and information we can find just from putting bits and pieces of the data we received together and critically thinking. Also, working together in groups was nice, because when we get out in the real world, we will need to know how to work with our co-workers.

Overall, I enjoyed class time a lot. It makes me feel confident knowing that I don't need to know the answer to everything to be able to help and assist a patient. Sometimes it is the small things you do for their care that they appreciate the most.
