This particular RN at the time was found sleeping on the job after overworking herself after working six 12 hour shifts plus an 8 hour shift. She was exhausted but instead kept working which resulted to patient not getting the care they needed.

The nurse should have stayed home to rejuvenate and relax after her third shift to avoid getting burnt out while on the job. I feel like the nurse failed to take care of herself thus leading to her not being able to take care of her client which is rather unfortunate.

I would make the effort to speak to my fellow nurse on the importance of self care to us and how that reflects on the patients we take care of. If I see it happen the second time whereby she's sleeping at work instead of taking care of her patients, then I would make a point to speak to our nurse manager and hopefully better resolve that situation. I'm not sure if this would be regarded as me being an accomplice to that because I talked to her the first time but reported the second time.
