The reason I chose nursing is because I genuinely enjoy helping people out when they need it the most. I also enjoy the practice and field of medicine as a whole; I love learning about the human body and how it works the way it does. When you combine that with the ability to help people regain their health, and educate them about their health, it makes it the most exciting career to me. I also do enjoy how unpredictable it can be, and how every day is different. You never know who you are going to be caring for, and you never know what you will get to see. Ultimately, I really enjoy the anatomy of the human body, and how intricate it is. When that gets mixed with helping people, that makes the career of nursing the perfect fit for me.
