

I believe that Sandy's comments were absolutely wrong, I'd say her offense was violating patient confidentiality while also not upholding an ethical moral for being a healthcare worker. Exposing the name of the patient incredibly violated the patient's privacy and rights which can definitely lead to legal issues. To talk about something like that in a public setting as well was not a very ethical decision. Due to her mistakes there is definitely a cause for litigation just for discussing personal information about a patient.
