Why I Want to Become A Nurse

I have always had an interest in the medical field and human connection has always been important to me. I've always been a people person and enjoy helping others. What originally gave me the push I needed was when my father fell ill in 2014. Seeing my father go through the struggles he did at that time and not knowing the extent of what was happening was difficult. All I wanted to do was help him but didn't know how. Something I had always kept telling myself was that I want to go back to school and eventually go to nursing school. During that time I felt like I had an obligation to finally put those thoughts and dreams into action and I enrolled in school. I wanted to be knowledgeable enough to care for my family when needed. Knowing now what I didn't then and putting the pieces together of what had happened to him makes sense now. This career is never ending in learning, and I want to continue to learn as much as I can. I feel a great sense of pride being a part of this field and working with patients and their families. It's a great feeling knowing that I am making a difference in others lives. By continuing my education and moving further up in my career I can continue helping others in their time of need.
