

I fell in love with the medical field when I was in high school. The school my friends were going to was a magnet school. In order to be considered as a magnet transfer, participating in a magnet program was a requirement. I picked the medical program. During my time in the program, I became fascinated with health science. Now that I have experience as an LVN, I have fallen in love with helping people. Being able to celebrate with patients during their victories, but also being an extra shoulder during the dark times makes me feel like I have a purpose. Being a nurse is stressful at times, but it is hands down the most rewarding career.
