

I wanted to be a pediatrician doctor as a child. The older I was, and life does not always route the way expected, I was able to work my way up the ladder. I was a CNA first about 7-8 months, then employer I was working for sent me to school and I became a CMA, and then, after getting my last child in school I went back and became an LVN. Working my way from the bottom, I learned a different appreciation for my position, I wanted to be different, and to stand alone from the rest. So I'm continuing my education and perusing the next level of receiving my RN.
