DAS Assignment #2

Name of the defendant: Judith Francis Chant
600209

License number of the defendant:

Date action was taken against the license: 20 March 12

Type of action taken against the license: Reprimand with stipulations

The defendant failed to disclose her previous crimes that she committed. On paper work for the TBON she answered "no" to the question "have you ever been convicted of a crime other than a minor traffic violation?". The defendant falsified this document because she had been convicted of multiple crimes varying from misdemeanors to felonies. Because of this incident she had been reprimanded with stipulations

I actually don't think harm against a patient was committed. I don't have all the information but just by reading this it seemed like she was sorry for her past (this is literally like a movie, I recommend the read) It stated she had wanted to erase her past but she did not qualify for her record to be expunged. I think if something had come up in those years in between this and after she had become a nurse about her messing up again then for sure, patient harm would have been committed because she would have been a licensed nurse and those crimes can lead to a whole world of bad decisions when caring for a patient.

I cant think of any universal competencies that were 100 percent violated. The few I can think of is "safety and security" by promoting trust and respect. How could she promote those good things when she knew she had lied about her past? Also "communication" was violated because she did not utilize resources to enable consistency with TBON and her agency. Lastly her professional role was skewed from the beginning.

I would have told her that everything is okay now. That all that is in the past and keep on performing to the standards of a nurse. In other words I would say learn from your mistakes and build off of it. Dont let the past affect her future and keep on being a good nurse. I assume she was a good nurse, if she had been a FNP for so many years.
