At an early age, I learned the most important commandment God gave to us. To love one another as Christ loved us. To be still and have patience. No one should look for their own good but for the good of others. My passion for the healthcare field began when I saw family members working as nurses. Then, my passion grew larger when I saw close family members in and out of hospitals for health-related reasons. When I was able to begin science courses, my interest grew. Another plus side I've come to find in this trusted profession, is the job security and you can specialize based on your interests. In 2018, I started to work as a Certified Nurse Aide. My experiences being a part of the healthcare system revealed to me leadership, responsibility, compassion, patience, and diligence. I can provide the patient and the patient's family with advice, wisdom, emotional support, and encouragement. Becoming a professional in the field of medicine is being a part of something bigger than yourself. I knew that's what God was calling me to do. I volunteered for mission work locally and nationally with the church. It brought me joy to supply help for the community. It's extremely rewarding to offer hope and make a difference in people's lives. It breaks my heart to a million pieces seeing mistreatment towards patients. I've seen firsthand mistreatment towards my own family in the nursing home/hospital setting. It's a priority of mine to change that issue. To offer more kindness and patience is the ultimate key. As a nurse, we can counsel the patient and the patient's family after a devastating diagnosis, help people through their most vulnerable times, become trusted confidantes, and celebrate with them the small praises and accomplishments.
