

I want to be a nurse because I want to be able to help people in need and know that I am making a difference in the world, even if just for a moment. It is not a matter of feeling important but more of wanting to contribute to the world that we are all connected to. The hospital is almost never a good experience in our lives aside from childbirth and I want to ensure that my patients feel as if they are genuinely cared for as human beings and not, simply, a number on a clipboard. The profession also pays well and would (hopefully) allow me to create a non-profit food truck wherein I am able to make restaurant quality dishes and utilize my skills and passion for cooking and plating as a means help and uplift those in need.
