

When I was five, my mom had a still born and it was one of the most heartbreaking experiences I have ever gone through. As I got older my mom talked about what the experience was during the procedure. She explained how confused and scared she felt and since then it was my aspiration to be there for the mothers who unfortunately also go through this situation. Now that I have begun to work in a hospital, specifically on the medical surgical unit, I realized there are many other situations where may be alone and need some support. So, the reason I want to be a nurse is to provide support for others in a vulnerable state in their lives.