

Why Nursing?

The first time I enrolled in a nursing program, my response to this question was always that I wanted to be a nurse to assist people in need. However, after two years of being a nurse and gaining much more experience, my answer has evolved. Beyond the desire to help people, I aspire to be a nurse who instills confidence in her patients. I believe that, in addition to the knowledge required for nursing, a positive attitude is essential to convey something beneficial. A smile, a hug, or a simple thank you from a patient is the most gratifying thing I have experienced, and it is something I would not exchange for anything. Personally, it is one of the many reasons why I chose this profession.
