My desire to become a nurse wasn't a shock to me. All my life, I have always loved helping others in any way I could. It wasn't until my grandmother was diagnosed with terminal cancer, that I realized I loved helping others in a medical way. I want to become a nurse because I know that we are meeting our patient's during a tough time in their lives, and I believe with my compassion and empathy, I can help make a difference in their lives. I have a strong passion for the medical field and I believe I can utilize my passion to help others.
