

Why Nursing?

Nursing has always been something I saw myself doing. I have always been the caretaker or the one you ask for medical advice. I have always had a special interest in the human body, how it functions, why it may not function properly, and how to fix it. A few months before I decided to go back to school my daughter ended up in the hospital with something called MIS-C. It was something new and only children seemed to get it a few weeks after recovering from COVID. During that hospital stay, I got to see the ins and outs of how much nurses do and care for their patients and the rewarding feeling they must get when they help a patient recover. Doctors may give the orders, but the nurses are the ones who care, comfort, and execute those orders. I am a caretaker at heart, so there has never been a question as to why nursing, it has always been why not?
