Student Takeaway

I found our patients today to be very resilient and most had a very solid routine for their treatments. Patients as young as 3 or 4 years old were very calm with the help of the child life specialist. I also witnessed one patient that was 22 years old, but was still being treated at the pediatric clinic due to him being down syndrome. I witnessed ports being accessed, prophylactic antibiotics, platelet administration, and labs being drawn on all patients. One of the new things I saw today was the administration of IV Benadryl prior to Pentamidine being given. (I have never seen this drug used.) EMLA cream was used on every patient and seemed to really help. All staff had great relationships with their patients and were very knowledgeable and kind. The child life specialist helped with port access on every patient and was very good at diversion tactics and keeping the children engaged.
