I want to be a nurse because I have seen how much of a difference genuine care can make in someone's life. My grandmother's passion for helping others really inspired me, and watching her dedication showed me what it means to serve with heart. Working in the hospital has also opened my eyes to how nurses are there for patients during some of their most vulnerable moments. They are not only providing medical care but also offering comfort, reassurance, and support. I want to be that steady presence for people and make a real difference when they need it most.
