Introduction

I obtained my undergraduate degree in psychology. However, there were semesters in which I majored in business, biology, and architecture. I have had no regrets about my well-rounded education, but had I been able to have a Career Direct Consultant, I would have saved myself a great deal of stress, time, and money. My preference would have been to have taken a "direct" path to my career.

For many years, my M.S. degree in Clinical Psychology and my license as a mental health counselor enabled me to work successfully counseling children, adolescents, adults and families. In addition, I administered psychological and psychometric testing.

In more recent years, I have been a pre-school teacher where I have had the privilege and opportunity of working with children, some of which have special needs, and their parents. In addition, I consult with other professionals regarding special considerations and needs of the children I teach.

I enjoy helping people engage in self-discovery. Understanding ourselves gives us the upper edge in not only career selection, but in our social, personal, and business relationships. As a Career Direct consultant, we will explore and discover your unique gifts and abilities. Career Direct will help you select a career by giving you information and resources that match your God-given design. As a result, you will gain greater fulfillment in life, including your career.

Specialty Details

My professional background has allowed me to work with various populations. I have worked as a licensed professional counselor (mental health counseling), college instructor, certified psychometrist, and pre-school teacher. Included in my experience as a pre-school teacher, I have worked with special needs children and their parents. My work as a psychometrist included conducting interviews and writing educational assessment reports on adults and children. My greatest joy comes from connecting with people across the lifespan and helping them to fulfill their God-given design.
