To make your dream of becoming a flourishing architect a reality, there are aspects of your personality in your interest subject and priority areas that you would need to strengthen to align with your core personality traits. These are information technology and Writing / communication and the placement of your values in the surrounding area of your priority. Your detailed report shows that your scores in these areas were at the bottom of the ranking. They may not feel like your strongest areas of interest right now, but they are essential tools for turning your career dream of becoming an architect into reality.

WHY DOES IT MATTER?

Modern architecture leans heavily on design software, 3D modelling, and digital presentations. You will find the need to develop basic skills in relevant digital programs like AutoCAD, Revit, or SketchUp very useful. Learning to engage with the computer will not just make you a better designer, it will give you a cutting -edge advantage.

Why Writing & Communication Matters

Great architects are not only designers, they are also story tellers who paint pictures with words! They communicate their concepts in the most creative way to appeal, attract and sustain the interest of their clients to the point of commitment. This will sometimes find expression in proposals, reports, contract biddings and presentations. Your creative personality is already evident in some of your talents such as art/design, singing and sporting skills and abilities. Make it even more powerful by incorporating a unique and creative style into your writing and communication skills. Every new skill you acquire positions you to make giant strides in your chosen career.

Adventure and Outdoor Exploration.

No doubt you have a great adventurous spirit but in your priority section, outdoors and adventure were listed low in value and importance compared to others. I understand that this may be because you are already involved in a whole lot of activities that are equally of value to you. When paired with school work it may sound like a lot. However, It is important for you to keep in mind that your priorities can change as your situations and circumstances change. In line with that, keep in mind that your top three personality traits, outgoing, adventurous and creative naturally predispose you with a deep desire and interest to engage and interact with the outside world. You can feed this natural interest by finding healthy opportunities that actively engage you in healthy outdoor activities. Your current busy athletic engagement is very encouraging as it yields to your interactive nature.

You can further enrich your outdoor skillset by acquiring basic photography skills. You may create leisure time to explore different neighbourhoods, museums and land mark sites in the city or your immediate locality. You can practice your basic photographic skills with photos that can inspire design ideas for keeps both in your mind and in your physical space. This will make your outdoor exploration both exciting, joyful and impactful as it allows you to express yourself in your natural and unique design and still have lots of fun!

It is also important that you seek mentors who can direct your skill focus. When you turn 17, it will be helpful for you to take the career direct assessment for enhanced focus.

Keep aiming high. You have everything it takes to succeed and be YOUR EXTRAORDINARY SELF. Always remember that faith in God is top on your priority list for purpose in life. So deliberately look for opportunities to serve God and the interest of his kingdom.
