

The highest level of nursing education I am planning to complete as of now is my Bachelor's degree and eventually I want to go back for my NP depending on where life takes me. I have a three-year-old daughter and I feel as if I have missed out on some things in her life due to school. Bachelor's degree is very flexible online and I can work at my own pace so I can potentially have more family time. Nursing is a constant field of learning, and I always knew that I wanted to pursue higher level. A lot of hospitals want you to get your bachelor's degree. It can potentially increase my salary, increase my autonomy, increase my opportunities, improve outcomes for patients, and help me advance my career. Also, earning a BSN may become mandatory!

I've also been in school since 2014 and changed my major when I knew I should have stuck with Nursing. I wanted to do something in my career that is interesting, challenging and makes a difference in people's lives daily. I plan to continue my education after I enter the work force for awhile so I can be the best nurse possible. I am hoping to get my NP so I can eventually work doing home health for children. I love being able to work with patients and assume greater responsibility in terms of patient care. My NP is also very influencing to me and I would choose to see her any day over my family doctor. I also know for now, obtaining my BSN may open many more doors and opportunities for me in the long run. After I obtain my BSN I will see where life takes in my career and go from there as long as I'm happy and my patients are cared for.
