The highest level of education I plan to complete is my PHD. I want to become a professor and be able to teach. I picked this level of education as I've always had amazing experiences with my professors. They have guided me into becoming the student I am today. They help when you are down and think nothing can fix things. They help you learn the material and aid in helping you better your nursing skills.

Upon graduation I plan to go for my MSN through American Public University. I received my masters in healthcare administration from there. They have a bridge program from RN to MSN. The program always you to take less BSN classes and obtain your BSN upon the completion of the requirements. The MSN part has two different pathways; nurse educator or nurse leader track. Some of the classes I took for my healthcare administration degree are in this workload so I will be able to use those credits. After my MSN I plan to start looking into different Nursing PHD programs.
