Nursing is a rewarding field and is also one of the most high-demand career paths currently. Being a nurse allows you to make a difference and be a light in the lives of others. I started my healthcare journey about 10 years ago and have wanted to pursue a career in Nursing. There are so many types of nurses and so many career paths you can take. Nursing starts with the LPN, and you can work your way up the ladder to have your DNP. There are so many nursing programs that allow you to find one that is the right fit for you. As of now, I plan to gain experience and learn time management to be the best safe nurse I can be. With due time and more experience under my belt, I have two dreams for my nursing career. First I would love to work in Pediatric oncology. This means getting chemo certified which is on my list eventually. The second would be to travel. I want to be able to explore the world while doing what I love.

The highest level of schooling I plan to achieve right now would be my BSN. This will allow me to work in the specialty of my dreams. BSN will provide me with the necessary tools needed to continue my education later on if I so choose. Most hospitals now require you to have your bachelor's degree so with this I can have a higher earning potential, more job options meaning more access to other specialties, and I could advance in my career. I am in no rush but whatever education is needed to pursue these dreams I will do, but I believe having my BSN will allow these dreams to come true for me.
