

Elizabeth McCloy

Ch. 6 Assignment

The highest level of nursing education I am planning to complete is to obtain by bachelor's in nursing. Originally, my goal was to get my masters and become a nurse practitioner but since starting my career at the hospital that has shifted. The shift was due mainly because of schooling and just wanting a break, but also NPs have a lot of responsibility and liability with their jobs. I whole heartily respect all nurse practitioner and the time and effort they put in to obtain their degrees, but at this present time in my life I do not see myself wanting to obtain a masters.

I also feel kind of burnt out from school in a way so who knows maybe in a few years my goals may change to obtain my masters and pursue another aspect of nursing. I have been in school since I graduated high school with one small break after graduating with my associates before starting LPN school. I do believe knowledge is power so I would love to look back on this to see where I have come, and my mind-shift change in a few years. Nursing school is hard for everyone so it is very hard to think of wanting to do more schooling after but like I stated earlier goals can change! Looking forward to finish off this semester stronger than I started with, with some persistence and hard work!