Dear Members of Congress:

I am reaching out to express my concerns about how expensive emergency room visits and medications have become for many Ohioans. As a nurse intern, I see patients every day who struggle to afford care, and I believe we need to do more to help them.

Many people come to the ER because they have no other choice, but they often leave with huge medical bills, even if they have insurance. High costs make some people wait too long to get care, which only makes their condition worse and leads to bigger medical problems. We need better protections to keep ER bills fair and make costs clearer for patients.

Another big issue is that once patients leave the hospital, they sometimes can't afford the medications they need to recover. Without these medications, they end up getting sick again and coming back to the hospital. We should expand programs that help people pay for their prescriptions and push for lower drug prices so that everyone can get the treatment they need.

No one should have to choose between their health and paying their bills. I urge you to support policies that make emergency care and medications more affordable. I would love to hear what steps are being taken to fix this problem.

Thank you for your time and for working to improve healthcare in Ohio.

Sincerely, Dylan Wilson
