5. Explain the Federal Financial Aid Advance policy.

Students who are facing a financial emergency may request a financial aid advance on any expected grant or long payouts. In other words, if a student has grant or Lone money forthcoming, and will have a credit balance after all tuition, fees, and books have been paid, the college may provide an emergency for financial advance on that balance to be used for unexpected expenses. Financial aid advances may not be given until after the end of the drop and add period.

Emergency financial aid advance can take a variety of forms, including tuition waiver or financial aid advances. These measures are designed to help students avoid interruption in their college studies due to an unforeseen emergency. The most common situation that may lead to a student eligibility for emergency financial aid includes:

A sudden health emergency

Unexpected loss of income

Death in the family, or other family emergency

Rent in arrears, risk of eviction

Natural disaster

6. What are the conditions for dual enrollment for undergraduates?

Students who qualified for dual enrollment are required to meet with their advisor and the dean of graduate studies during the semester prior to their dual enrollment taking place to ensure that all pre-requisites are met in order so that students can transition into the graduate studies when the new semester begins.

For a student to have a dual enrollment status, the following conditions must be met:

- 1.) The student is in the final year of their undergraduate degree program; with less than 12 hours to complete before graduation.
- 2.) The student has met with their advisor and receive permission to apply for graduation. [All requirements for completing their current undergraduate academic program will be satisfied prior to the graduation date].
- 3.) The student has a GPA of 3.0 or above.
- 4.) The student has met with the Dean of graduate studies and received the approval to register for graduate courses.

Notes:

1. A separate application is required to be admitted into the graduate degree program.
2. Graduate courses take count for graduate credit only.
3. Even doing dual enrollment, graduate courses take count towards graduate GPA.
