

I used inductive reasoning this week to figure out how to do some of my math this week, because I had example problems but no real instructions, so I figured out the numbers and figured it out myself.

Deductive reasoning is used more like the scientific method and is used frequently in science class. For instance, if-then statements are generally deductive reasoning. Like "if A is true, then B is also true." I usually use this when I play games by myself.