

Some objective statements from the press is anything that is true. Like if the news was to say someone said “hi” and that person said Hi then it was an objective statement. For my first example of objective I am going to talk about a USA Today article about Ryan Newman, A nascar driver, was in a severe accident on Monday, he is now speaking and awake. This article is a fact and is about a real event that happened. (<https://www.usatoday.com/story/sports/nascar/2020/02/18/ryan-newman-hospital-awake-speaking-daytona-500-crash/4798199002>) for the next objective article I am going to be referencing an article about a ship that was termed a “ghost ship” washing up on the shores of Ireland after a year drifting after being abandoned. This is also just a simple true fact and is objective. (<https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/world/2020/02/18/ghost-ship-mv-alta-washes-ashore-ireland-county-cork-bermuda/4793295002/>)

The following is the subjective statement on how gun control will be bad for us. (<https://www.usatoday.com/story/opinion/2020/02/16/red-flag-gun-control-proposal-iowa-bloomberg-column/4761638002/>) I agree with this, in the fact that it won't help, but it is subjective because it is opinion based. The other article I picked is about former president George Washington Loving presidents day sales. While this is a mostly a reason for people to shop it is still an opinion because it claims the former president loved to shop. (<https://www.usatoday.com/story/opinion/2020/02/16/presidents-day-sales-honor-george-washington-go-shopping-column/4752530002/>)