

During the surgical rotations, there were many different opportunities to learn. The time there seemed so less than what it was. It was gone flash but was very entertaining and exciting to watch. These rotations introduced me to a whole new side of nursing which I had never seen. The nurse were working together like a well oiled machine and the information process was very well explained to the patient. From getting the patient to surgery to putting them under and starting the procedure it was such a quick process. I first saw two manipulation both of the shoulder joint. This processes were under anesthesia and was safely prosecuted. The next one that I saw was a TURBT which is a transurethral resection of bladder tumors. This procedure was very interesting to watch because the doctor went up into the bladder and looked for a tumor. Then the doctor cut and then used the “coag” button to stop any bleeding that might happen.
