Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

For my Teacher Plan Presentation I chose the topic of Attention Deficit Hyperactive Disorder from the Center of Disease Control and Prevention. I believe this article was an easy read for not just me as a student, but also for teaching patients and their families. I would classify this reading level on moderately easy. The patient could still use some explanation with some of the article since most patients with this condition are taught about it as children. The visual appeal of this site is nice because of the pictures that come along with the text. Some of them could help the child patient understand what the article is trying to teach. I believe this site to be accurate with its information because of the type of site it is. It is a government run site so the information has to be accurate and studied to be put on the website. I found the article to be very intriguing with all the information it had. It sustained my interest as a student so i think it would be easy for the patient or the patients family to want to learn about ADHD.
