Scenario
Tom, 14, is already using supplements, which he and his dad believe are boosting his athletic performance. Intervene now to talk with them about the risks of supplement use and prevent Tom from using more dangerous substances later.

Overall Engagement

Overall Engagement

0 of 0 points Selected option:
You did a nice job addressing Tom's use of supplements, but you chose not to broach the subject of steroids.

Rationale:
However, Tom shows many risk factors for future steroid use, like his supplement use, gym use and weight gain goals. It would have been helpful for him to hear about steroids first from his healthcare team and family.

Scenario

Ella, 16, has had heart palpitations and other warning signs of stimulant misuse. Find out if she's using stimulants and make or assist in the development of a plan to address her stress and help her quit.

Overall EngagementOverall Engagement*0 of 0 points*Selected option:

Overall you did a good job talking with Ella about stimulants.

Rationale:

You did a good job identifying Ella's anxiety as the underlying cause of her stimulant use. Now she will be able to get the mental health support she needs.

You could have also asked about her use of alcohol or other substances. Many teens who misuse prescription medications also use other substances.

When working with actual clients, you may want to break this conversation up over two or more visits. It might take multiple conversations for a teen to admit use or decide they want to change, so don't give up if you meet resistance the first time you bring it up!

Communication Technique Feedback:Points on technique separate from overall points*Asking Respectful Questions*0 of 0 points*Rationale:

When gathering information, you used open-ended questions to encourage Ella to share her experiences.

You also made an effort to use Ask-Tell-Ask, but sometimes you gave information before asking what Ella already knew. Beginning with a question builds buy-in and allows you to tailor the information you give.

Building Trust0 of 0 points*Rationale:

Though at one point you seemed dismissive of Ella's concerns, in general you appeared to take her problems seriously. You could get a better score in this area by avoiding dismissive language; instead of trying to reassure her, you could try to understand her concerns and collaborate on them.

Validating Ella's Experience0 of 0 points*Rationale:

You reflected what Ella told you and normalized her feelings. This made her feel accepted and understood. It also built trust so she felt safer confiding in you.

Next time you could also use summaries to keep Ella on track and let her know you are listening.

Scenario

Cody, 17, has put on 30 pounds of muscle in the last year and shows warning signs of steroid use. Find out if he is using steroids and help him develop a plan to wean off.

Focused Undo Performance

During this simulation, you encountered 0 forced undos. Forced undos occur when your conversation reaches a "dead end" that is not positive for the client. Try to avoid conversational paths that lead to forced undos in the future in order to improve your score.

Selected option:

Overall you did a good job getting Cody to consider your perspective on steroids.

Rationale:

Unfortunately, you weren't able to convince Cody to consider quitting, but he did agree to continue the conversation in future visits. That is, in itself, a victory. It can take many visits and many conversations to build the level of trust to help a client quit. But for the sake of their health, it's always a conversation worth having.

Asking Respectful Questions

7 of 10 points

Rationale:

You took a respectful approach to questioning Cody. There was one time you gave Cody information that he wasn't ready to hear; next time, you can ask a question before sharing (Ask-Tell-Ask) to make sure you're being respectful. It will also help you tailor your information to the gaps in his knowledge.

Avoiding Confrontation

6 of 10 points

Rationale:

After trying a confrontational tone, you quickly learned that you get a better response by showing respect. When he felt respected, Cody was more willing to confide in you -- from his perspective, he has a lot to lose and trusting you would be a big risk.

Giving Accurate Information

8 of 10 points

Rationale:

You did a good job helping Cody understand the negative adverse effects that steroids can have on his health, and you helped him see that his approach to his weight and fitness might be part of a disordered pattern of eating and self-image.

Next time, you could also respectfully share information about the ongoing process of weaning off steroids. In general, the more you know about steroids, the more you'll be able to talk on the same level as teens who are using them.

Validating Cody's Experience

10 of 10 points

Rationale:

You affirmed Cody's achievements and reflected his feelings so he knew he was understood. You also normalized his desire to be more fit, which helped him talk about steroid use without worrying about being judged. This built up trust between you and made him more comfortable discussing his steroid use.
