Noticing	Interpreting	Responding	Reflecting
Why did you choose this additional assessment? What did you notice during your additional assessment of the client? Were there any assessments that were abnormal or that stood out to you? I chose the PHQ-9 assessment because my patient was admitted with depression &amp; suicidal ideation. I noticed that neither questionnaire really performed to the patient except for a "rare few moments" where she felt immensely sad &amp; depressed. None of the assessment questions on the PHQ-9 term were abnormal or stood out to me.	If something stood out to you or it was abnormal, explain its potential cause or patterns that you noticed. Describe any similar situations you have experienced / as well as the similarities or differences between the experiences. Is your interpretation of the situation links to pathophysiology at all, if so - briefly explain. The only thing that stood out was her mood; she was so happy &amp; outgoing that it made it feel like I shouldn't be asking these questions because they don't really pertain. I have not encountered this issue yet where what I was suppose to be creating really doesn't apply.	What additional assessment information do you need based upon your interpretation? What can you do as a nursing student? What did you do? What could you do as a nurse? I would need to know more about the patient's history such as previous treatment, current treatment, support systems, etc. With this information, I could have a better understanding of the patient so that I can see how much improvement the patient has made as well as anything that could stand out more if I understood the patient better.	What is something that you learned? What is something that you might do differently in the future? What is something that you did well? What additional knowledge or skills do you need to help you with future situations like this. Describe any changes in your values or feelings based on this interaction. I learned that she appears to be a genuine person who really cares not just for herself but others as well. I thought I remained personable, &amp; more open, &amp; less awkward. I think it helped that she was more friendly so it enabled me to feel &amp; be more friendly. I also think it helped to work &amp; talk as if you're some central over the screen where I didn't have to make eye contact all the time.
